

Creating Greater Opportunities guided by Our Feelings

Copyright 2011 James Dunn

To receive the benefits of living within an Ethical Environment, an individual must accept accountability for their own actions

- + Feeling of "so much to do, and so little time" (lack of boredom)
- + Desired outcomes prioritized
- + Logic used to act upon priorities ("Critical Thinking")
- + Impulse use of personal/system resources not condoned
- + Applied effort results in "accumulating" beneficial gains

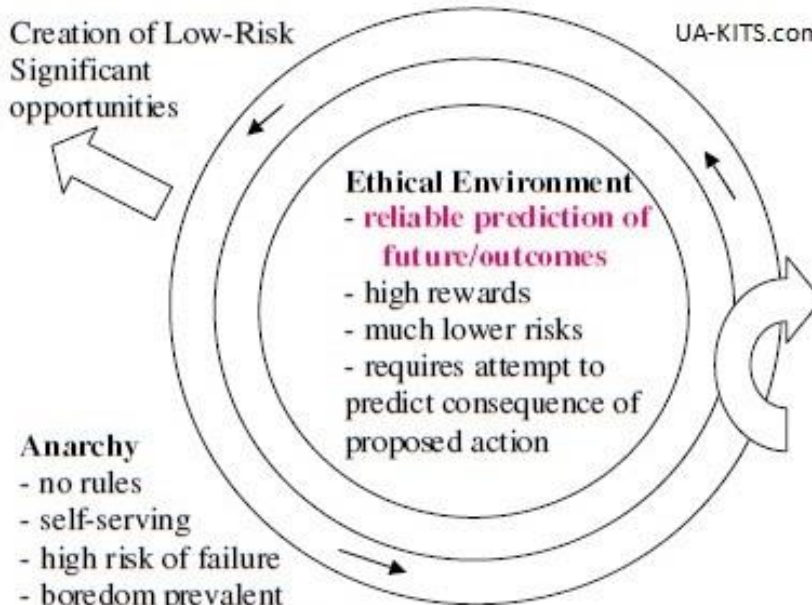

An ethical environment is a social system of people working together to help each other promote mutual successful outcomes; growth opportunities.

Perceived safety promotes using cash flows rather than micro-managing assets.

Happiness ONLY requires a base of good health and being broadly grateful; a thousand good things happened today.

Creation of Low-Risk Significant opportunities

UA-KITS.com

Anarchy

- no rules
 - self-serving
 - high risk of failure
 - boredom prevalent
 - self-deceit creates arrogance
 - in constant state of drama / turmoil
 - much higher likelihood of early death
 - maximizes suffering (personal and society)
 - loathing of others substitutes for self-respect
 - general feeling that life may end the next day
 - corruption evolves through "illegal allocation"
 - any planned effort is easily disturbed by others
 - fear is used as substitute for respect from others
 - inherently unstable, any effort may cause disaster
 - lack of accomplishment creates feeling of entitlement
 - outcomes unpredictable, therefore cannot predict the future
 - many take from each other by any means; reinforcing "fear to complete"
 - envy of material gains promotes ego, arrogance, and feeling of entitlement
 - principles of sustainability passively crippled due to feeling of indifference
 - found more often where "people shunned by traditional societies" concentrate
 - fear of responsibility and failing to meet expectations creates "fear to complete"
 - no respect for others possible, anarchy depends upon being destructive towards each other
 - very limited employment possible since long term development outcomes can not be predicted
- Only Minor or Extremely High Risk opportunities
- Self-Respect relates to areas of aptitude, & Self-Esteem relates social relationships to Self-Respect
 - anarchy creates PTSD and personal accomplishment limited due to constant internal distraction
 - ADD/ADHD has similar consequences, alcohol commonly used for self-medication
 - brain damage from mother, possibly father, contaminating fetus during pregnancy/conception
 - contamination may include alcohol, drugs, huffing glue, industrial chemicals...
 - Drug addiction pushes people into anarchy, due to a constant state of distraction
 - www.drugaddictiontreatment.com/types-of-addiction/self-medicating-drugs-alcohol/

People and business that act unethically are cast back out into social groups where anarchy is allowed as a social norm, i.e. no significant enforcement of the use of ethical tools or common sense

The closer anarchy approaches ethical environments, the greater likelihood of being shunned and incarcerated (no real respect)

Respect can ONLY be obtained by teaching someone something useful that they can teach to someone else

Arrogance is the Loathing of Others so NO TEACHING OCCURS

Oppressive & inconsistent rules and environments promote anarchy